HASSON CALLOWAY, 93

Longtime Eastern pilot earned his license at age 17

War veteran, retiree also helped found private school in '59.

Capt. Hasson Calloway often told people he never went to work a day in his life.

Flying meant the world to the longtime pilot. Signs of an aviation career appeared at a tender age. Growing up in Tennessee, he would get in trouble for sailing paper planes from the church balcony, said a son, Maxwell Calloway of Atlanta.

"His interest in flying goes way back," his son said. "It was everything to him."

Capt. Calloway overcame polio to become a pilot. At 17, he earned his pilot's license, and five years later joined Eastern Airlines in Miami. He retired from Eastern in 1977.

On Monday, his son said, the captain proclaimed an old pilot's phrase: "I'm out of runway."

Capt. Calloway died Monday at Piedmont Hospital of complications from pneumonia. He was 93. The graveside service

Hasson Calloway was a Tennessee native who overcame polio to become a pilot. He flew air transport in World War II. Flying "was everything to him," his son said. Family photo will be 1 p.m. Saturday at Lynnhurst Cemetery in Knoxville. H.M. Patterson & Son, Arlington Chapel, is in charge of arrangements.

Capt. Calloway was born in Tazewell, Tenn. He graduated from Boys High in Knoxville and Oak Ridge Military Academy in North Carolina.

During World War II, he flew military air transport in South America. He returned to Eastern Airlines after the war and was based out of Atlanta. He flew for that airline 37 years, a period that included the days when Eastern was owned by Eddie Rickenbacker.

After Eastern, Capt. Calloway served for 13 years as chief pilot for the Georgia Tech Research Institute. He flew into his 90s and logged a total of 35,960 flight hours.

A woodworker, he built two aerobatic airplanes and enjoyed painting aviation portraits. In 1978, he donated a piece of his artwork to the National Museum of Commercial Aviation in Forest Park. It's a painting of the first commercial transoceanic two-way crossing.

"I would call my dad a pilot's pilot," said a daughter, Carolyn Calloway of Atlanta. "He never missed an opportunity to take a trip up, even if it was just to circle the fields or an airport. His life revolved around planes."

Dr. John David Mullins of Sandy Springs said the captain gave him his first flight in a small aircraft.

"It was exhilarating," the plastic surgeon said, "and it launched my interest in aviation. He was the consummate pilot and his experience level was a rarity."

In 1959, Capt. Calloway and three neighbors - Dr. H.B. Stillerman, Tom Holloway and Dr. Gregory Bateman - teamed up to start a private school, Arlington School, now called Arlington Christian School, in Fairburn.

The captain served as the first president of the school's board of directors.

He and Marian Calloway, his wife of 70 years, first met in a church youth group in Knoxville.

In addition to his wife, son and daughter, survivors include another son, Ron Calloway of Roswell; and four grandchildren.

Vilified pair 'very upset'

Judge Nix

Marietta Daily Journal that he "flicked" the bottoms of Assistant District Attorney Susan Treadaway and Deputy Investigator Glenda Roberts after the women sat on his lap to take a picture.

"If the ladies took it as offensive, then I apologize to them," Nix told the Daily Journal. "I do not think it was any more than that to it. There was no intent on my part. It was done in a place where several people were around. But rather than cause my family the embarrassment and go through a claims or whatever, I was willing to retire and wrote a letter of retirement to the governor."

Head said that Treadaway and Roberts were "very upset," because they never filed a complaint but were being blamed for the fallout. "This is exactly why women who are sometimes assaulted never come forward, because they become the person responsible for it," Head said. "The blogs are calling them everything in the world."

The judge stayed away from the media glare Wednesday as the announcement about his impending departure reverberated through the community. Nix was not in his office, and Chief Magistrate Judge Frank Cox was filling in for him Tuesday, Wednesday and today, according to Superior Court Administrator

Tom Charron. Nix did not return calls to his home or office. In a letter of resignation tendered to Gov. Sonny Perdue, Nix wrote that he would retire on his 71st birthday on Oct. 4. His four-year term ends in 2012, but he was technically eligible to retire 15 years ago at age 55.

A review by The Atlanta Journal-Constitution of personnel files for Treadaway and Roberts revealed no information regarding any complaints filed by them or against them. Both were present at the review of their files, but declined to comment.

Treadaway was hired as a staff attorney in the Cobb district attorney's office in August 2008, according to her personnel file. She was appointed an assistant district attorney in December 2008. Prior to her work in Cobb, she was a prosecutor in Cherokee County for almost four years.

Roberts spent almost 20 years in the Cobb County Sheriff's Office, reaching the rank of a deputy sheriff sergeant before transferring to Head's office as an investigator this year.

Atlanta lawyer Ben Easterlin, chairman of the Judicial Qualifications Commission, the state agency that investigates misconduct involving judges, said he could not comment on whether the commission was investigating Nix's conduct. All complaints are kept confidential until they are resolved or closed or the commission gives notice of formal proceedings, according to its website.

Charron said he was not aware of any complaints filed against Nix.

But Commissioner Tom Lowe accused fellow commissioners of sliding new projects onto the agenda that do not protect the community.

"Our number one priority ought to be the protection of the citizens of the city of Atlanta," Lowe said, as Darnell walked out of the room.

There are people who are summoned to the courthouse to appear on juries, he added, "and by God we ought to protect them."
